

Instructional Design SIG

Save the Date

We've got a new SIG!
Yes, ATD WV has a new Special Interest Group (SIG) for Instructional Design.
The SIG idea stemmed from a conversation during a Lunch 'n' Learn when some Charleston Geographical Interest Group (GIG) members started talking about instructional design, learning technologies, and authoring tools. Breanne Myers, an Instructional Designer (ID) with the WV Division of Personnel, thought it would be a great idea to create a group to formally share knowledge and tools around instructional design. Hence, a SIG was born.
The ID SIG held its first meeting

February of this year. Attendees explored several cool tools applications in Articulate Storyline along with hands-on instruction and exploration time. The group also shared resources for media content and experiences with authoring in Articulate Storyline. Breanne said "I was excited to get people together who were all trying to figure out how to do online training and do it well."

Members with various levels of expertise will share their experiences at the quarterly meetings. Check the ATD WV website for the next adventure into Instructional Design.

Call for Conference Speakers

The Association for Talent Development (ATD) West Virginia Chapter is hosting its bi-annual conference for workplace learning and performance professionals on October 19-20, 2017, at The Erickson Alumni Center in Morgantown, West Virginia. Our goal is to deliver engaging, research-based, actionable programming to our ATD West Virginia members and friends.

The theme of the conference, Advance Your Career, focuses on competencies necessary to advance learning and performance professionals. Are you an expert on any of these subjects? If so, we want to hear from you! We are interested in selecting speakers who share our commitment to providing the training and development community with unique experiences and real-time information that matters.

Training Tip

"To value oneself, and at the same time, subordinate oneself to higher purposes and principles is the paradoxical essence of highest humanity and the foundation of effective leadership" - Stephen Covey
